DARK Secret

CROUCHING in the tropical shrubbery that lined the beach of Blackhawk Island, the mighty Blackhawk himself watched the shape slide closer through the moonlight. At first it had been no more than a darker speck on the sea. Blackhawk, making a last restless patrol of the island before falling asleep, had spotted it and hidden here to wait for developments. Now, close at hand, he saw that it was a small motor boat with its motor shut off, being rowed in by a single occupant.

Tensely, Blackhawk eased his automatic from its holster and set his feet for a quick attack. He saw the boat lift on a white-fringed breaker and then slide gratingly onto the beach. The man in it stood up.

Blackhawk started forward and froze. A figure was darting from the bushes nearby, running down to meet the mysterious intruder. And suddenly Blackhawk's throat tightened. The man was Andre, his own trusted Blackhawk.

"No," Blackhawk whispered. "It can't be. Not Andre, keeping a secret rendezvous in the night, like a traitor."

A hundred wild memories flooded into his mind. Andre had been acting queerly for more than a week. Twice he had snatched a letter out of sight when Blackhawk entered the room. Once, flying a routine patrol over the mainland, Blackhawk had been sure he saw a white object tumble from Andre's plane, like a message thrown to some one on the ground below. He had dismissed the thought then as absurd. Now it came back to taunt him.

Criminals all over the world would pay a fortune—a dozen fortunes—to see Blackhawk destroyed and his mighty band broken up. Had Andre been tempted beyond mortal's power to resist? Was he conspiring with someone to kill his own friend and leader?

Chewing his lip, Blackhawk saw Andre accept a small package from the figure in the boat, saw them exchange a whispered message. Then Andre was fading back toward headquarters, and the mysterious boatman was sculling his craft back to sea. Blackhawk raised his pistol and then let it drop into its holster. With dark bitterness flooding him, he turned and made his way back to the camouflaged buildings that were the Blackhawk headquarters.

On impulse he went along the path toward the dining room shack, where Chop Chop held sway in his kitchen. The little Chinese with his garbled English and awkward ways would give every drop of his blood to save his beloved master. If there was anything afoot, Chop Chop would know of it.

Blackhawk stepped to the door of the room where Chop Chop slept. He rapped softly and called his friend's name. When there was no answer, he opened the door and stepped inside. Approaching the bunk, he bent and shook the figure under the blanket.

Instead of sitting up, the figure fell apart at his touch. It was only a spare blanket, rolled and tucked there to look like a sleeping form. Bleakness came into Blackhawk's eyes. Then his jaw set. If treachery was brewing, the time to meet it was now, face to face. He turned swiftly and tramped to the big lounge where the Squadron relaxed between flights.

He kicked open the door with a crash, strode over the threshold and froze, gaping. A table had been set up in the center of the big room. Places were set around it for every member of the Squadron. And in the center of the table stood a huge cake, its top dotted with flickering candles.

From across the room, Andre shouted: "To Blackhawk, ze happy birthday!" and the voices of the others echoed, "Happy Birthday!"

Blackhawk choked on words that would not come. "Gang," he began. "Gang, I . . . Oh, my gosh! I'd forgotten my own birthday."

"But not ze squadron," Andre beamed and thrust the package into Blackhawk's limp hands, the package he had gotten from the mysterious boatman a few moments before. "Here is ze birthday present from all of us. A good friend of Chop Chop's bought it and delivered it. Ma foi, it is ze nicest wrist watch to be had in all China. Wear it to remember ze loyalty of your friends, my Blackhawk." And then he stopped, staring blankly at the first tears he had ever seen on the cheeks of Blackhawk.
